viewpoint has changed (93). Lutherans typically believe that a child that dies in infancy can be saved through their mother's participation in the church and where the Word of God is spoken as well as the idea that children can be exposed to the gospel before they were born (94).

Reformed View

The Reformed view upholds that infants and adults have inherited Adam's sin. Many reformed theologians hold that children can sin in the womb due to the Calvinists view of the fall and depravity (126). The Reformed view also states that Baptism is a sign and seal of the covenant rather than the actual act of a child becoming part of the covenant (122). Calvinists believe that God has elected people to be saved, thus infants who die in infancy have hope because of their possible election (125). Reformed families also have hope because they believe that God is the ultimate judge who will do what is right (142).

Baptist View

All Baptists uphold that infants and adults should be baptized after they place their faith in Jesus as a public sign that they are followers of the Lord (155). Baptists believe that Baptism does not save, for it is an act of obedience and a symbol of one's new life in Christ. Baptists believe in original sin, but ultimately believe that infants who die in infancy are safe with God in heaven (166). For Baptists, immersion is the only way someone can be baptized and there is no age minimum that children have to be in order to be baptized (161).

Summary of Five Views on Infants and Children in the Church

I grew up in this church and it was not really until college that I began to study different denominations and religions. It really challenged me to think about "why" behind my beliefs. Keahbone recently shared a post from Shane Pruitt on Facebook about infants that pass away. I highly recommend reading it! I personally uphold the Baptist view depicted below. I think it is important to understand the different viewpoints regarding salvation and baptism, especially when it comes to children. Please note I am not trying to present any viewpoint in a positive or negative fashion, but just shed light on information that was really helpful to me.

The following information is cited from Harwood, Adam, Kevin E. Lawson, Jason Foster, David Liberto, David P. Scaer, and Gregg Strawbridge. Infants and Children in the Church: Five Views on Theology and Ministry. B & H Academic, 2017.

Orthodox View

The world is inherited from Adam and his descendants, thus there are consequences of sin for all humanity (16). In the womb, each baby realizes the overall effect of sin, but they are victims not yet active perpetrators of sin (17). A priest immerses a child in baptismal water three times and the child is baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit (26). The infant thus becomes a member of the church and enters the kingdom of God and eternal life (27).

The Orthodox viewpoint does uphold the idea that God is merciful (36).

Roman Catholic View

In Catholicism, revelation from God is from the Holy Scriptures and Apostolic Tradition (48). Catholics believe that when Adam disobeyed God, he lost original justice as well as fell from grace. Due to this, the friendship with God was broken and the ultimate penalty was/is death for humanity (50). Infants thus bear the consequences of original sin too. The only remedy for the sickness of original sin is baptism by immersion or pouring (53-54). The Catholic Church does not have a clear statement on what happens to a child who dies in infancy (56). Since then, many Catholic scholars have tried to depict some limbo state for unbaptized infants to rest or at least hope for children who die in infancy.

A Lutheran View

For Lutherans, baptism is of the upmost importance, for baptism destroys sin, and gives new life to believers in Christ (81). It is not faith that provides salvation, but baptism, for faith merely justifies the sinner (82). Furthermore, there is no limitation on children being able to be baptized, but remorse over sin and faith in Christ are necessary for baptism (84). When a child is baptized, they become a member of the church (87).

Also, in emergency situations any Christian can administer baptism (93). Lutherans believe that sin originated in Adam and is passed down from generation to generation (86). It was traditionally held that children that were not baptized did not receive salvation, but in recent years the
