It Is Not Hard

Being a part of someone's salvation journey is not hard. It is about developing relationships, being a Christlike presence around them, and prayer. Here is an example.

I was blessed to baptize my youngest grandchild, Brighton, this past Sunday. Her salvation journey began on the day that she was born because on that day her Gammie began praying for her salvation every single day until it was her time to go Home. On that day, I began praying every single night for that same blessing.

Her journey continued several years ago when she met a girl named AnnaBelle, with whom she did gymnastics, and they became friends. They became close, and AnnaBelle began asking and bringing Brighton to church and youth events, and Brighton found love and community.

A couple of weekends ago, Brighton attended a youth retreat, and that Saturday morning, I prayed and asked Jesus to direct the Spirit to move her to decide to follow Him. That afternoon she sent me a text and said, "Poppy, tonight I have an exciting question to ask you!" I quickly replied, "I am in tears." I knew before she told me that night that all the prayers had been answered. In. His. Timing.

She told me that on that Friday night, as they were singing "Who Else is Worthy," her heart was touched with tears. The Spirit was moving. On Saturday morning as she was singing that song again she began to weep. Annabelle looked at her and simply said, "Brighton, I think that you should be baptized."

We make it too hard. We think that we have to have so much knowledge and use so many words. Love on people. Listen to people. Pray for people. Be Christ to people. Let God do the rest. In. His. Timing.

Blessings,
Rick
